NEW OXFORD A FLAG STATION

Fast Express will not Stop at Porters but will Have New Oxford as a Flag Station. Will Run Daily Starting on Monday.

The fast express train from Pittsburgh to Baltimore which will leave Gettysburg daily at 5:40 a. m. will have New Oxford as a flag stop. The evening express arriving here at 11:22 will have but one stop between Baltimore and Gettysburg and that will be Hanover, the flag stop for New Oxford not being provided on this train. The stop at Porters both ways has been abandoned and another connection will be had with York. Persons leaving Gettysburg on the early train for York, will change cars at Hanover, arriving there at 6:10 a. m. and leaving at 7:00 for York. Returning from York in the evening, the time will be 9:45, arriving at Hanover at 10:35 where there will be a seventeen minute wait for the express.

The schedule takes effect at 8 o'clock Sunday morning, the old one remaining in effect until that time. The following trains are provided by the new schedule:

No. 8—Daily, 5:40 a. m. for Baltimore. Stops at Hanover. New Oxford, flag station. Express from Pittsburgh.
No. 46—Daily, except Sunday, 9:37 a. m. For York and intermediate points. Local from Hagerstown.
No. 43—Daily, 10:24 a. m. for Hagerstown and intermediate points. Connection for the west. Local from Baltimore.

No. 4—Daily, 2:37 p. m. for Baltimore and intermediate points. No connection for York. Local from Cumberland.

No. 44—Daily, 5:51 p. m. for Baltimore, and intermediate points, and for York. Local from Hagerstown with connection from Chicago limited.

No. 45—Daily except Sunday 6:56 p. m. for Hagerstown and intermediate points. Comes only from York.

No. 7—Daily, 11:22 p. m., for the west. From Baltimore, stopping only at Hanover.

YEGGMEN CAUGHT

Baltimore Detective Arrests Four Suspected of Hanover Burglary.

Detective Bradley, of Baltimore, has placed under arrest two women and two men, alleged to be connected with the safe blowing at the Hanover station a week ago. The women are said to have been about the station several days before the burglary, selling pins, and getting the general location of things. A quantity of the pins was found in the house in Baltimore where the arrest was made.

The prisoners had no chance to put up a fight, for they were all asleep when the detectives entered their room in a house.

At the central police station the men gave their names as Frank S. Scott, of Pittsburgh, and William Zane, of Philadelphia. The women said they were Annie Scott and Mary Zane, wives of the men.

RESIGNS

GET POISONED PEN EPISTLES

Letters Assailing the Character of Prominent Citizens of McSherrystown, Thrown on Door Steps and Sent through Mails.

Letters assailing the characters of some of the best known citizens of McSherrystown have been distributed in the community during the past few weeks and an investigation is now under way to discover the author of the poisoned pen epistles.

The principal charges brought against the victims of the underhand scheme are drunkenness and failure to support their families. In every instance, it is claimed, the charges are groundless and can readily be disproved but still the work of the writer goes on. He, or she, has been at work now for almost a month and many of the letters have found their ways into McSherrystown homes.

The people of the village are naturally much excited over the occurrence, for, in almost every instance, the prominent citizens rather than the obscure, have been attacked.

Some of the damaging letters have been sent through the mails and others have simply been left on doorsteps where they were later found by the residents of the house. The natural hand-writing of the author is said to appear in several of the letters together with crude printing. Some of the men attacked have taken an active part in local politics and it is believed, this is back of the accusations.

It is claimed that the malicious letters are the work either of an unbalanced mind or of some person who is not fully acquainted with the seriousness of the crime. It has not been stated whether the postal authorities at Washington have been notified of the condition.

SPRING GROVE FIRE

Amusement House and Ice Cream Plant Destroyed; Origin Unknown.

Fire discovered at 1:15 o'clock this morning in Spring Grove destroyed the Spring Grove Amusement House and the plant of the Spring Grove Ice and Ice Cream Manufacturing company, entailing damage estimated at $7,000, which is partly covered by insurance. The origin of the blaze is unknown.

The buildings destroyed are one and a half story brick structures and were recently remodeled. The fire was discovered by George Sprengle, night operator at the ice plant. He says he first saw the blaze coming from the east end of the amusement house and sounded the alarm by blowing the plant's whistle.

Sparks from the burning buildings were thrown in all directions and the residences of Mrs. David Hoke and Abraham Hoke, nearby, were endangered. The flames were kept from spreading by the efficient work of the Friendship Hose Company directed by Chief W. L. Glatfelter.

FIRE DESTROYS ONE MAN CHURCH

Church Building Erected through Efforts of Mr. Guinney, of the Cold Spring Charge, is Burned to the Ground.

The White Rock Lutheran church, at Pondbank, which Rev. James Guinney, the Lutheran pastor at Cold Spring, Hamiltonban township, built almost entirely with his own labors, was destroyed by fire, at noon Friday, with all its contents.

Sparks from a freight locomotive set fire to the roof, it is said by the people of that vicinity.

Men nearby hurried to the church as quickly as possible and endeavored to save some of the furniture but the flames spread so rapidly that they could not get into the edifice.

All the pews, pulpit, organ and books were destroyed. The building was burned to the ground. The loss will be probably $2500.

The church was erected about a dozen years ago. Attention was attracted to it by the fact of the labors of Rev. Mr. Guinney, the young pastor who did practically all the carpentry work upon the structure. He was well known in Gettysburg through his labors for the people in the mountain section of this county.

The church now has no regular pastor. Rev. J. Peters, Chambersburg, preaches there occasionally.

KENTON HARPER

Son of Robert G. Harper Died in Washington, D. C.

Word was received in Gettysburg this morning announcing the death of Kenton G. Harper, in Washington. The message did not state the time of his death.

Mr. Harper formerly lived where the Masonic Building now stands. He was a son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert G. Harper and left Gettysburg many years ago. He was prominent in Masonic circles and held a governmental position.

He was a past master of Lodge No. 4, of Washington, and historian of the Grand Lodge of the District of Columbia.

Services will be held in Washington Sunday and the body will be brought to Gettysburg Monday morning, interment being made in the family lot in Evergreen cemetery immediately after the arrival of the 10:24 train over the Western Maryland.

Members of Good Samaritan Lodge are requested to be present upon the arrival of the train, to conduct the services in conjunction with a delegation from the Washington lodge.

MUST BE TAUGHT TO EAT APPLES

County Contributor to Apple Magazine Says that is the Way to Guard against a Year when Every Section. Has Big Crop.

C. J. Tyson, of Flora Dale, writing for the first number of "The Apple World" which has just appeared discusses "The Bumper Crop". Mr. Tyson is president of the State Horticultural Association, and treasurer of the Apple Advertisers of America. He says:

Hardly a week goes by but we read or hear of someone who tells us that too many apple trees are being planted, and that very soon apples will sell only at a loss, and the whole business will go to the dogs.

Of course, we put up a good bluff and call these folks "calamity howlers" and "pessimists", but down in our hearts we know there is a lot of truth in what they say. Trees by the million have been and are being planted. Hundreds of thousands are coming to bearing age each year, and this number will increase tremendously in the next five years.

Each season for several years past nature has so planned that calamity of some kind, either frost, severe storm or drouth, has visited several of the important apple growing sections, and the crop has been cut down. This condition may not continue; even the coming season may see a "bumper crop" throughout the whole country, then "what will become of the apples?"

It sounds bad, but it is not hopeless. Here is the solution. Only a very small part of the population of our country is eating apples. There are actually millions in our cities and towns who do not have the "apple habit"; who do not know about apples. It is our duty, and should be our business, to let them know. Some experiments in advertising have already proven that a little publicity can greatly increase apple consumption. Proper advertising will increase the consumption of anything, and if the article has merit and the advertising is judicious, it will pay, and pay handsomely.

What do you suppose would become of the tremendous output of the "57 varieties" if the H. J. Heinz Co. were to cancel all its advertising and allow the world to choose its own "appetizers"?

It seems to me that it would be very good business for the apple growers of the country to get behind some well organized plan for advertising apples, and push it with all the might that is in them. I can see no other hope for the "bumper crop."

AGREE TO PART OF PEACE PLAN

Huerta to Approve of Provisional President.

WILSON MAY DROP CARRANZA

Robts Send Delegates, But They Will Not Be Received Unless Armistice Is Declared.

Niagara Falls, Ont., June 13.—The wheels of the mediation conference are turning fast since the three South American diplomats who are conducting the proceedings signified in no uncertain manner that they would no longer permit themselves to be made a pawn in the hands of the Washington government.

The first and the most vital part of the peace plan evolved by the mediators has been put into writing and definitely adopted by all sides. The first part of the plan provides for the installation of a provisional government in Mexico to take the place of General Huerta. The actual form of succession has been left open, but it has been definitely agreed by all sides that no candidate will be chosen who has not been approved by Huerta.

The mediators and delegates will next take up the matter of names. After a candidate, believed to be acceptable, has been agreed upon the Mexican delegates will transmit his name to General Huerta, and not before the choice has been sanctioned by the provisional president will it be adopted at the conference.

Developments plainly showed that the Wilson government is prepared even to completely abandon General Carranza rather than to permit the mediation conference to fail.

The fact that the new plan, which has now been definitely adopted, provides for the selection of a candidate acceptable to General Huerta, was definitely confirmed by one of those most prominently connected with the conference. It was explained that the choice of the man would not be left to the dictator. The selection will be made at Niagara Falls, but no man will be chosen who is not believed to be acceptable to the present head of the Mexican government.

This puts an end to the rumors that the provisional presidency would be delivered to Carranza.

General Carranza has sent his long-delayed reply to the recent note from the mediators. It announced that he was sending three representatives to Niagara Falls, but no announcement was made as to the conditions on which he was sending them.

The note was received in Washington and was forwarded to the mediators. It makes no mention of an armistice. The "A. B. C." envoys reiterated that unless an armistice was declared the Carranza delegates would not be received officially.

It was understood nevertheless that they would be heard unofficially and that a conference with them might be arranged with the American and the Huerta delegates. If an agreement resulted from these conferences the Carranzistas would be admitted to mediation to sign a protocol.

PLAN PERFECTED, SAYS BRYAN

Refuses Further to Discuss Program For Mexico.

Washington, June 13.—"A definite plan for the selection of the provisional president of Mexico has been perfected," said Secretary of State Bryan. "I do not wish to announce the particulars of this plan prematurely, and would better not discuss the details."

Mr. Bryan intimated that he regarded the plan as tentative until there was participation in the mediation conferences by representatives of General Carranza. Though he described the plan as tentative, he gave the assurance that it would be acceptable in all quarters.

Woman Not Guilty of Murder.

Easton, Pa., June 13.—The jury trying Mrs. Martha Allaby, colored, of Redington, on the charge of having murdered John Buss, a white man, in an hour found a verdict of acquittal. Mrs. Allaby testified that she shot Buss in self-defense when he attacked her in her home in the absence of her husband.

Child Victim of Runaway Horse.

Mahanoy City, Pa., June 13.—A runaway horse of the Ashland Brewery company tore madly through the streets here, trampling five-year-old Marie Klapala under foot. The child has a fractured skull and will probably die. Two other children narrowly escaped injury.

Bleeds to Death Playing Golf.

East Hampton, L. I., June 13.—Samuel Isham, widely known as an artist, bled to death on the golf links of the Maidstone Country club here. While playing a rery burst, and although two physicians worked to save him he expired. He was fifty-nine years old.

LORIMER'S BANK IN CHICAGO CLOSED

State Examiner Takes Charge of Institution.

Chicago, June 13.—The La Salle Street Trust and Savings bank, organized by William Lorimer five years ago, when he was United States senator from Illinois, and of which he has since been president, was closed by the state bank examiner.

Coincident with this action, the bank examiners also closed three state banks which had heavy deposits with the larger institution.

No statement of what the closing of the La Salle street bank actually means in dollars was made by the examiner. Recent reports to the state auditor placed the deposits at more than $5,000,000. For the last three weeks, according to officials, there has been a mild run on the bank and more than $1,000,000 of deposits have been withdrawn.

The smaller banks which were closed were the Illinois State bank, of Chicago; the Broadway State bank and the Ashland and Twelfth Street State bank.

Daniel V. Harkin, state examiner for Cook county, expressed the opinion that the smaller banks would resume business in a few weeks. He said they were closed for their own protection.

THOMAS DOLAN DIES IN 80TH YEAR

Bronchitis and Old Age Was Cause of Death.

HAD BEEN ILL TWO YEARS

Philadelphia Financier Left an Estate Estimated at Between $20,000,000 and $30,000,000.

Philadelphia, June 13.—Thomas Dolan, for many years president of the United Gas Improvement company prior to 1912, and one of the wealthiest men in Philadelphia, died at his home in Torresdale, a suburb of Philadelphia.

Mr. Dolan was approaching his eightieth birthday. His fortune has been estimated at between $20,000,000 and $35,000,000.

With the financier at the time were Mrs. Dolan, his widow, and his three sons, Thomas, Jr., Yale, and Clarence, with the wives of the two former sons.

The funeral will be held on Monday afternoon, and will be made as quiet as possible. Only relatives and intimate friends will attend, it was said at his residence.

Services will be conducted at two o'clock in the afternoon in the handsome home in Torresdale by Rev. Allen R. Van Meter, rector of All Saints' Protestant Episcopal church, Torresdale.

For several days death had been expected. Mr. Dolan's health had been failing for two years, and although he was active mentally there was a steady and apparent physical deterioration. His troubles were chiefly those that are encountered frequently in men far advanced in years, who have led active and strenuous lives.

He was afflicted with arterio sclerosis, but this was not a prominent factor in causing his death. Several weeks ago he contracted bronchitis. This had a weakening effect upon him, and the extremely warm weather of the last few days wore him down.

The serious aspect of his condition did not become generally known until Wednesday. Then it was announced that his condition was grave, and that the end might be expected soon. He rallied Wednesday, but that evening had a sinking spell and grew steadily weaker.

During the last week four nurses have been on duty night and day, and four physicians arranged their attendance so that one might be with Mr. Dolan continuously. He fell into a state of coma Friday morning and did not again recover consciousness.

In the many years of his activity, few business men occupied a more important or potent sphere in Philadelphia than did Mr. Dolan. His influence extended to many fields, and in each he was a power. As manufacturer, director of street and steam railroads, and finally as head of the U. G. I., he exhibited a capacity for management of large undertakings that placed him among the foremost financiers of his day.

ANOTHER BALKAN WAR

Turks Attack Greek Town and Massacre Is Feared.

Athens, Greece, June 13.—An official dispatch from Mitylene, an island off the coast of Asia Minor, to the Greek government, says that Turkish regulars, with machine guns and a force of Bashibazouks, commenced an attack on the town of Alvalik, on the coast of the mainland. As the town is inhabited by 25,000 Greeks, a mass massacre is feared.

The threat of another Greco-Turkish war did not come as a surprise to diplomats. It was pointed out that events in the near east during recent months had been kindling the strongest animosities between the two peoples.

Greece accuses Turkey of the wholesale expulsion with great cruelties of Greek Christians from the province of Thrace, while Turkey accuses Greece of oppressing former Turkish subjects in the region of Saloniki, which was taken by the Greeks in the recent Balkan war.

THE RESOLUTE.

Heresheff Yacht Croke All Records in Race.

© 1914, by American Press Association.

After a glorious race in a fine fifteen-knot southerly breeze and a jump of a sea the flag officers' Herresheff designed yacht Resolute won a clean cut and decisive victory over the Cochran yacht Vanitie over a thirty-mile windward and leeward course off Sandy Hook. Incidentally the Resolute broke all records for a windward and leeward course of thirty miles, covering the distance in three hours, sixteen minutes and forty-one seconds. This picture was made near the finish.

RESOLUTE WINNER FOR FIFTH TIME

Beats Vanitie in Race Over America's Cup Course.

Sandy Hook, June 13.—Resolute, the New York Yacht club flag officers' yacht, triumphed for the fifth time over her rival cup defender candidate Vanitie, on the Sandy Hook course, winning without her time allowance.

The official time as given out by the regatta committee gave Resolute a lead of nearly three minutes at the finish over the triangular course of thirty miles, over which the contest had been fought.

The Defiance, the Tri-City entry, on account of the necessity for reflagging, was not entered. It is hoped that she will be ready on June 23, when the cup yachts resume their trials.

Resolute, successfully maneuvering for a weather position from the start, increased her lead, until at the first mark four minutes separated her from the pursuing Vanitie. Rounding the first mark, it looked for awhile as if Alexander Smith, Cochran's, yacht would overtake her, but she soon manifested her power to hold her advantage, and on the two ten-mile reaches kept her lead.

U. S. JUDGE IMPEACHED

Congressman Accuses A. G. Dayton, of West Virginia.

Washington, June 13.—Impeachment proceedings against Judge Alston G. Dayton, of the northern district of West Virginia, charging "high crimes and misdemeanors," were started in the house by Representative M. M. Neely, of West Virginia. Neely's charges were referred to the judiciary committee.

It is alleged that Judge Dayton has shown marked favoritism to certain corporations having litigation in his court; that he conspired to bring about the removal of Judge John G. Jackson, that he, Dayton, might succeed him; that he has put on grand and petit juries persons favorable to corporations having litigation in his court, and that he assisted his son, Arthur Dayton, an attorney, in preparing cases tried before him.

WASHED OVERBOARD

Body of Young Frederick Bluejacket Not Recovered.

Charles H. Linthicum, of Frederick, called on Senator John Walter Smith at Washington Friday to invoke the latter's assistance in recovering the body of his son, Paul W. Linthicum, a sailor in the American Navy who, according to the report of Admiral Badger, was washed overboard and drowned from one of the ships of the fleet at Vera Cruz on Wednesday. Senator Smith immediately called on Secretary Daniels, who, however, was unable to give him any further information. The body has not been recovered, but at Senator Smith's request, Secretary Daniels instructed Admiral Badger to make every effort to find the body and when it is recovered to send it to the lad's home in Frederick. Young Linthicum was only 18 years old. He enlisted in the Navy about a year ago, and has been home once since he has been in the service.

Transferring Box Kites.

The United States experts use box kites in many meteorological experiments, but have hitherto found difficulty in transporting them across the country from one station to another by reason of their shape and size. A novel type has been devised which, by cutting a few strings and loosening four bolts, permits the kite to be knocked down into flat, compact form, very much like a collapsible box or carton.

HOW TO KEEP THE BOY ON THE FARM

Problem Solved by Unique Idea of Minnesotan.

HIS FAMILY A CORPORATION

He is President and the Boys and Girls are Interested Stockholders. Latter Are Department Managers and Can Buy Father's Stock Out of the Dividends.

The age old problem of how to keep the boy on the farm has been solved by a Minnesotan farmer. John McCallum, a canny Scot farmer of Big Stone county, organized his nine sons and daughters into a corporation and divided the stock of his 1,800 acre farm among them, as though it were a regular city business, a factory, store or mill.

McCallum himself was elected president of the farm corporation, by the vote of all the stockholders, while his oldest son, Gilbert, was elected general manager and a younger son, Leslie, was chosen secretary and treasurer. One son was made superintendent of the hog department, all full blooded stock. Another boy was chosen to care for the horses. Between two other sons the cattle and sheep were divided. The girls were placed in charge of the home. Each child was made superintendent of some division of the farm work and given supreme authority in his or her department.

Farm Corporation is Born.
"I thought the matter over a long time," says the farseeing Scot, telling of his plans. "Then I finally drove to town, got a lawyer and told him my plans. I suggested we call the farm the Lismore stock farm, from the name of the island in Scotland where I was born. He incorporated the farm with a paid up capital representing my valuation of the farm and stock. I had a stock book printed and filed regular articles of incorporation.

"A few days later I called the children into the parlor one morning after breakfast and told them to be ready for a surprise. There were five sons and four daughters. I had capitalized the farm at $100,000 and divided the stock into blocks. I kept enough for a controlling interest. Then I presented each child with a block of stock. The plan I had outlined was for them to keep at work, buy some of my stock each year, so that by the time I die they will have purchased all of my stock and will have absolute control of the farm."

Makes Report to Government.
The children were enthusiastic over the idea. It gave them an interest in the work on the 1,800 acres that they had never had before, and before the first week was over each one of the board of directors was doing his best to stir the enthusiasm that beset any large corporation. The directors hold daily meetings around the family breakfast table, where the work of the day is apportioned, while annual meetings of the stockholders are held, as required by law, and the formalities of business procedure are duly observed.

The McCallum farm is the only farm corporation in Minnesota—and one of the few in the entire United States—that makes reports to the state and to the United States the same as a big railroad corporation does.
What has been the result of the experiment? Of the nine children eight have stayed by the farm, one deserting it to become a lawyer. Nor have the eight stayed against their will or because they did not know by experience the lure of the city. Five of the children have been away to college, have completed their courses and then hurried back home to stay by the old farm, in which they are directors. Two of the girls are now at college, drawing dividends from the farm corporation and planning to return home the minute they have won the coveted degree.

In only one important particular does the McCallum corporation differ from the usual one. The check book is a decided innovation. Mr. McCallum has a special set of checks printed. Each year a certain percentage of the surplus is set aside. Each director may write a check on this surplus fund, in order upon the check what the money is for and cash it without asking the permission of any other director.

GUESTS FLY TO A DANCE.

Two Flying Boats Carry Sixteen Passengers When Roads are Impassable.

The social advantages of having a flying boat were demonstrated at Hammondport, N. Y., when a party of sixteen persons was taken to and from a reception and dance ten miles down Lake Keuka. A number of visitors to Hammondport were invited to attend the party, but the Lake road was found to be impassable owing to heavy rains.

Mrs. Charles C. McChord of Rochester suggested to Glenn H. Curtis that the party be transported by the air route. Curtis agreed, and two of the big flying boats were used.

Four trips in each direction were made by the machines, and the enthusiasm of the aerial joy riders was so great that it is likely a permanent service for the Saturday night dances will be arranged.

Comic One.
"I sent Flo my portrait the other day." Made quite a hit, I suppose?
"Well, I don't know. She acknowledged receipt of one comic valentine."

MODERN CRUSOES FIND REAL FRIDAYS IN GUIANA WILDS

Farrabee Explorers Discover Savages Ignorant of Simplest Implements.

When Daniel De Foe conceived the character of Robinson Crusoe it was hardly probable, in the judgment of the people of his time, that such a person ever existed or ever might exist. But over 200 years after the writing of "Robinson Crusoe" there comes a man from the tropical wilds of South America with a story of Indian tribes who, until his arrival, had never seen a white man nor a gun, nor clothing, nor any of the common evidences of civilization.

He is Dr. Franklin Church, a member of the Amazon expedition of the University of Pennsylvania museum, under the leadership of Dr. Farrabee. He recently returned from the Guianas after a four months' journey.

From Dec. 16, 1913, to April 1 last Dr. Church says the members of the tribes they studied were veritable Fridays, living in the most primitive manner. They had never seen a fishhook until the explorers came. They made fires by rubbing sticks together, a crude method, but one at which they were exceptionally expert. They had knives, but for weapons depended chiefly upon stones and thick clubs, as did primitive man thousands of years ago.

Upon one occasion the woodskins in which the party were transporting their luggage by water were broken to pieces while crossing treacherous falls. Dr. Farrabee in desperation stole one of four large canoes belonging to balata bleeders, who were working in the forest. This is a crime considered as heinous as horse stealing on the prairie. Had Dr. Farrabee been caught, he and his whole party would have suffered death. This is just one illustration of the chance with death which the party took. Dr. Church says. Next day the canoe was returned to its owners.

DR. ELIOT CHOOSES POEMS

Names Three Which He Says Every Child Should Know.

Supplementing his famous "five foot shelf of books," the reading of which he said, would give anybody a liberal education, Dr. Charles W. Eliot, president emeritus of Harvard, has selected three poems which he says every child should know. They are "The Village Blacksmith," by Henry Wadsworth Longfellow; "Abou ben Adhem," by Leigh Hunt; and "To a Waterfall," by William Cullen Bryant. Dr. Eliot quotes the verse:

He hears his daughter's voice
Singing in the village choir,
And it makes his heart rejoice.
It sounds to him like her mother's voice
Singing in paradise.

"Now, any child eight or ten years old," he adds, "will take that all in and will learn from it that the blacksmith had a daughter who could sing, and that she sang sweetly in the village choir, and the blacksmith had a wife whom he loved tenderly, and she was dead, and she sang with him, and now she was singing in a happy new world, in paradise, and the blacksmith liked to go to church because he heard his daughter, who reminded him of her mother. All that is in that little verse, and it is a beautiful picture of some of the best parts of human experience."

REPRESENT 1,000,000 WOMEN

Delegates to Chicago Convention Come From Every State in the Union.

There are a million members in the General Federation of Women's Clubs, the twelfth convention of which, beginning in Chicago June 9, continues until the 17th. This immense membership is composed of 6,000 clubs, and 10,000 women, representing the most important of these clubs in forty-eight states, participate in the big meeting.

Among the distinguished women who accepted invitations to take an active part in the program are Miss Margaret Wilson, daughter of the president, and Miss Jane Addams of Hull House. The president of the federation is Mr. Percy V. Penningbacker of Austin, Tex., and the first vice president is Mrs. Rudolph Blankenburg, wife of the mayor of Philadelphia.

WEIRD MEMORIES OF A MADHOUSE

Attendant's Story of Twenty Exciting Years in Asylum.

HOW LUNATICS' MINDS WORK

Quick to Sympathize With a New Arrival, Nurse Revenge For Years and Are Proud When Their Plots Succeed—Do Not Fear Watchers, Whom They Regard as Worst Enemies.

Twenty years in a lunatic asylum! What scenes! What happenings! Strange memories all!

They creep into my dreams sometimes, and I wake up with a shiver and imagine that a lunatic has got me by the throat, says a writer in Pearson's Weekly.

The morning when I began my duties they thought I was mad the same as themselves. They were sitting in the common room, some playing draughts, some dominoes. One elderly man who had been a dancing master was teaching several lunatics to waltz. A former soldier was polishing the buttons of his jacket, just as soldiers polish the buttons of their tunics.

Some stood in groups staring vacantly at one another, and one man kept bursting into a little laugh and muttering: "Poor devils! They are as mad as hatters!"

They were very sorry, they said, to see me there, but would do their best to help me out. I was invited to join in a plot to murder the governor of the institution and burn the place and promptly agreed, thinking it best not to displease them.

But later, when they saw me in the uniform of an attendant, they hissed "Traitor!" after me, and an inmate who had been a lawyer's clerk drew up what he called my death warrant, and it was signed by a good many other lunatics.

Sought Life of "Traitor."
For a time nothing happened, but late one afternoon I had a severe shock.

The patients had been exercising in the grounds, and one of them, a burly man, failed to respond to the call. I went in search of him. Suddenly he appeared from behind a big tree and pounced upon me like a panther.

The man was at my throat and in an instant had flung me into a hollow. He must have imagined that he had strangled me, because he promptly began to cover up my body with a collection of tree branches and earth.

I lay quite still, and after a few minutes the man ran off. When I heard his footsteps die away in the distance I managed to free myself.

The lunatic for some extraordinary reason had left my head free. From what I found out afterward I concluded that it was his intention after a few hours to bring my colleagues to the spot and point to my dead face peeping out of the grave. Madmen are astonishingly proud when their plots succeed.

Half choked with dirt, I returned to the building, to be greeted by laughter from the attendants. I pointed out how foolish it was to have anything in the nature of a hollow in the grounds.

"Why," said the oldest attendant, "there isn't a hollow about the place."

I led him to the place where the lunatic had buried me.

"Good heavens," he said, "the man must have dug it himself!"

Measured For His Grave.
He had. We found out that every day for weeks he had scooped a bit of earth from the spot with an old sardine tin. The grave was just my size. A few days later we found under his bed a tape measure, and I remembered that some time before I had allowed him, after much begging, to take my height, little knowing that he was measuring me for my tomb.

You often hear that lunatics go in daily terror of their attendants, but this is miles and miles away from the truth. An asylum inmate, as a rule, looks upon an attendant as his arch enemy. I have had many black eyes, many sore heads, many narrow escapes.

On the other hand, there are inmates as gentle as doves and as quiet as a deaf and dumb school. They are the men whose thoughts are always on suicide.

One of the biggest crimes an attendant can commit is to leave a knife lying about or a piece of rope or string.

I made the mistake once. Two inmates were on the knife in a moment. They fought for it in a way that froze my blood, and when we separated them several of the fingers were almost severed. The two men were never allowed to see each other again. A lunatic never forgives an injury, and he will nurse up his revenge for years.

DELICIOUS and wholesome hot breads may be made according to the following recipes:

Cornmeal Puffs.—Take one cupful of cornmeal, one cupful of flour, one teaspoonful of sugar, one-half teaspoonful of soda and one of cream of tartar (or one and one-half teaspoonfuls of baking powder), one egg, one cupful of milk and one teaspoonful of melted butter. Mix the dry ingredients together and sift. The milk is added to the beaten egg and stirred into the other. Bake fifteen or twenty minutes in a hot oven.

Made With Cold Rice.

Rice Muffins.—Take one quart of milk, three beaten eggs, one tablespoonful melted butter, one teaspoonful of sugar and two cups of flour, with which sift two rounding teaspoonfuls of baking powder and one scant one of salt. Make into a batter and beat in a cupful cold boiled rice. Beat well and bake in a hot oven.

Wheat Gems.—Take one pint of milk and add to it one tablespoonful of butter. Let stand until lukewarm. Then add one-half cake of yeast dissolved in a quarter cupful of warm water, three cupfuls of flour and one teaspoonful of salt. Beat well, cover and let stand in a warm place until morning. A half hour before breakfast beat two eggs, yolks and whites, separately and add first the yolks, then the whites, to the risen mixture. Beat and bake in gem pans in a quick oven.

For Luncheon or Tea.

French Rolls.—Cream one-fourth of a cupful of butter and one-fourth cupful of sugar together and gradually beat into a pint of light sponge. Add two eggs, whites and yolks beaten separately, and flour enough to make the same thickness as before. Cover and stand in a warm place until it begins to rise, then add flour to make the soft dough and knead well. Set aside again until it doubles in size, then shape like Parker House rolls. Sprinkle granulated sugar over the top. Bake fifteen minutes. When done lay a napkin over the rolls in the pan for five minutes, which makes a tender crust.

SHEER AND LACEY ARE THESE MID-SUMMER BRIDESMAIDS' FROCKS

As it is the mission of the bridesmaid to lend color and gaiety to the fete, her frock should be the very embodiment of youth and charm. This should not be difficult this season; materials are so sheer and designs so lovely.

Flowered chiffons, shadow laces and tulle are perhaps the most favored of all materials for this purpose. Plain and flowered tulle are combined with chiffon and lace and as illustrated in 8150, tulle is often used to trim lace and chiffon frocks. This design is here developed in shadow lace flouncing which lends itself excellently to the tiered effect of the skirt. An underdress of the most delicate pink chiffon lends color to the frock and is repeated in the overblouse of tulle. An odd, old fashioned looking, pinked ruching edge-neck and sleeves of the overblouse and

BEST USE OF GREAT WEALTH

Men of Millions Have Shown They Recognize the Duty of Benevolence.

A few years ago a gift of $1,000,000 for any benevolent object was a surprising and epoch-making event. A great advance in ideas of benevolence and the sense of responsibility for the use of wealth is marked when it is found that during the year 1913 there were 28 persons in the United States who gave $1,000,000 or more to benevolent purposes.

If a full list of these were printed few would be able to tell on what objects the majority of these gifts were bestowed, so common have great gifts to benevolent purposes become.

The amount in the aggregate of gifts during the year, as far as recorded, was $302,000,000. Of this, $170,000,000 was for education, and $95,000,000 for religious and charitable purposes, including missions.

The largest beneficiary was the Metropolitan Museum of Arts in New York city, which received $23,000,000, including an art collection valued at $15,000,000 from the Benjamin Altman estate, a collection of arms valued at $5,000,000 from W. M. Riggs, and the whole estate of J. M. Hammond, the typewriter manufacturer, estimated at $3,000,000. This does not include what the museum may receive from the $50,000,000 collection of J. Pierpont Morgan, part of which is now on loan exhibition in the museum.

Probably the next largest beneficiary of the year is the foundation for charitable purposes established by John D. Rockefeller, chartered in the state of New York. The amount is not named, and ultimately may exceed the gifts to the museum.

The $10,000,000 given by Andrew Carnegie for a charitable foundation in his native town, Dunfermline, Scotland, comes next. The gifts of Oliver H. Payne, of $4,250,000 to Cornell university, and Robert P. Doremus, estimated at under $5,000,000, to Washington and Lee university of Virginia, are in the same class.

But the most unique and heart-stirring gift of the whole year was that of Reed B. Freeman of Binghamton, N. Y., who gave his whole fortune, estimated at $3,000,000, to the families of the 30 girls who perished in the burning of his factory, and at sixty-five years of age began business again as a clerk in New York city, a poor man.

Curtain.
Gilbert K. Chesterton, the English satirist, was an extraordinarily stout man. An English newspaper, describing a meeting at which Mr. Chesterton was the principal speaker, said: "Mr. Chesterton then mounted the platform, and the chairman was seen no more for half an hour."

Very Old Custom.

The custom of saying "God bless you" to a person when he sneezes originated among the ancients, who, fearing danger from it, after sneezing made a short prayer to the gods, as "Jupiter help me." The custom is mentioned by Homer, the Jewish rabbis and others. Polydore Vergil says it took its rise at the time of the plague in 558, when the infected fell dead, sneezing, though apparently in health.

Red Tape.

Red Tape is the bulwark of inferior minds. Language is said to conceal thought; red tape paralyzes action. Politicians use red tape to create offices; without it, government would be so simple that everybody would understand it. If you would accomplish big results, look not upon the tape when it is red—Life.

Wooden Vessels Passing.

It is still customary for the poorer classes in India to carry home water on the head. Earthenware vessels have hitherto been in use, but as aluminum vessels are becoming cheaper they are replacing them because of greater lightness.

White Spots on Wood.

Oftentimes, when placing a vase of flowers on a table, we found that some water had run down the vase, leaving a white ring. After trying several things to remedy the color, spirits of camphor finally solved the problem.

A Novelization of Alice Bradley's Play

The story is a direct narrative of a fancied incompatibility between a self-made, iron-willed man and the humble, home-loving wife of his early struggles.

"Ah—good evening, Fannie," Strickland took her hand in his smooth, affable way. "I'm sorry, Fannie, that Wesley doesn't take more to Slade. It's a great mistake. Why don't you tell him so?"

"Oh, my gracious!" her manner changing to suit the occasion. "What influence could I possibly have with my husband? He's a man of iron will. Why, I have to do everything he tells me myself. I wouldn't dare to meddle with his affairs."

"Well, just coax him, Fannie, the way a nice, sweet, womanly woman can," urged the senator, knowing full well that the Merritts had one message for private use and quite another for publication.

"I want to go to Europe and my husband says he can't afford it," her voice dropped to a sugary whine. "We can't all be millionaires like Mr. Slade, can we?" Just think. It would cost $10,000, to say nothing of clothes."

"Don't worry about that trip to Europe, Fannie," the senator advised, meaningly. "I think," and he paused significantly, "I think you'll earn it." With that he started toward the smoking-room. "Wesley," he called, and as Merritt appeared in the doorway, remarked: "I believe your wife has something to say to you."

"Oh, yes, Wesley—I have something most important to say."

"Well, if it's about that trip to Europe," growled Merritt, asserting himself as he would never more to go when he was alone.

"Now, Wesley, come with me to the house," Fannie coaxed in what she considered her most winning manner. "You'll excuse us, senator?"

As Fannie dragged her husband out of the room Hayes, returning from the smoking-room, and Katherine, returning from her talk with the reporter, found themselves alone. Katherine was nervous and ill at ease. Immediately she began to busy herself tidying copies of her father's speech and inserting them into mailing envelopes.

"I Couldn't—Oh, Rob! I Couldn't."

"Slade's doing it," Bob remarked. "They are nearly all wiped out in there. Those who haven't been bullied, have been bullied or bought—Hold on! That sounds like the headlines in a Socialist paper."

"What's happened to you?" he broke off abruptly. "I can't find a trace of you left. Ever since you came back—I've been hunting for one sign of the girl I knew. Your notes—the very letters you wrote me from Europe sounded as if some one else had written them. Who is it who's occupying your mind, Katherine?"

"I don't know what you mean," the girl evaded.

"You used to care a lot for me," reflectively, his mind recalling the warm, eager welcome of her arms the day he had declared his love for her, six years before.

"I only thought I did," she declared, but her eyes dropped before his steady gaze.

"You did care," positively. "You did care. I could tell. When you went away the first time you did. Why, it was only a question of my luck turning. You were going to wait for me. I always knew that. Then I met Slade. Even the senator got a good word for me now. But you—" his voice broke and he leaned forward and laid his hand over hers as it rested idly on the table.

"Heavens!" he exclaimed, as he enatched his hand away. "What I ought to have done was to have ridden up here, taken you over my shoulder and galloped off with you on a broncho."

"Oh, Rob," she breathed, really pleased at his domineering tone.

"That's the sort of a man to get on with a woman like you," he accused. "A brute! A man could do anything with you if he once conquered you. There's nothing in these long understandings," he broke off, disgustedly. "I've lost you and I don't know how, or why. I do know you liked me better than anyone else, and I adore you yet," he finished, impulsively clasping her hand with both of his. Katherine patted his strong fingers with her free hand.

"Please, Rob, I know you do," and she left him to pass back and forth the length of the room. "I can't," she sighed. Then hurriedly: "If I only had the courage. Oh, Rob!" and she turned on him with a helpless little gesture.

"What do you mean by courage?" he demanded.

"I mean I'd have to—to live here in this little hole in the West," she burst forth, vehemently. "No—no, I can't face it—always!"

"Well, suppose it did mean to stay here?" Bob stood with folded arms. "It's a home. Everyone vegetates more or less at home. Katherine!" his voice became more tender, "do you really mean that?" And he put his arms around her shoulders and looked long and earnestly into her upraised face.

"I couldn't—Oh, Rob, I couldn't," she protested. "All this month I've been weakening—but I—"

"Ah," he interrupted, his face close to hers. "You're wearing my flowers, too—I saw that when I came in. And my picture—you are still keeping that."

"But I—I can't quite," she began. "I'm dreadfully troubled, Rob," she finally managed to say. She turned from his embrace. "We'd be poor and then we'd be like the Merritts," with a tragic spread of her arms. "I'm used to the world. I want to live—everywhere—to see things. I'd die here, vegetating!"

"Oh, no you wouldn't," Hayes started, remonstrating, when the door of the smoking room opened and Slade appeared.

"I was just going to look you up, Robert. I thought you wouldn't go without seeing me, but—"

"No, of course not," Hayes did not attempt to conceal his annoyance at the interruption. Katherine moved slowly toward the door.

"I'm not driving you away, am I, Miss Katherine?"

Before she could answer Fannie Merritt came sweeping in. She was radiant. Her beaming face and Merritt's sullen one made the situation plain to all in the room.

"My dear," she exclaimed, turning to Katherine. "You were quite right! Mr. Slade is a great man. I'm leaving my Wesley here to work for him. I'm off for Europe next week," she gushed as Hayes helped her into her evening wrap, "leaving my poor, dear boy all alone. You will be good to him, won't you? Good night, Mr. Slade; thank you," and, closely followed by Katherine, she hurried out to her waiting motor.

Slade's face was a study in amused complacency as he realized that he need fear nothing more from Wesley Merritt or his "tin-horn tooting sheet."

The self-esteem that was slowly but completely obscuring clear vision, prevented him from seeing that his money, not himself, had brought about the change. The money he had made was his—was he—himself. He confused his vast power to bend the Merritts and their world with his own strength.

CHAPTER VI.

"Mrs. Slade won't sign over the cottage," Hayes began abruptly. "I can't do anything more."

"She must," Slade uttered the words through set teeth. "She can't live there. Robert, you are the only person who knows us both thoroughly. I want you to bring this matter to a finish quietly and kindly and now."

"Why don't you see her and have it out with her?" Hayes suggested.

"We had it out the night I left the house and told her not to wait up for me," Slade reminded him. "I never quarrel with anyone more than once." He eyed Hayes critically for a minute. "You're with me, aren't you?" as if an idea had just occurred to him.

"I'm awfully sorry for Mrs. Slade," Hayes began, when Slade interrupted. "Look here, Hayes—I want a divorce," and he seated himself squarely in front of the astonished Hayes.

"A divorce?"

"That's what I want," and his lips shut grimly.

"But my God!" Hayes was amazed.

it want it in the first place.

"I Think I'd Like to Make a Bargain With You."

All you wanted was to live your own life. Do you expect me to help you get rid of Mrs. Slade?"

"Don't go crazy," Slade advised, not a suggestion of feeling evident in his voice or manner.

"If you do you are due for a surprise. I can't go sticking a knife into that woman's heart. I won't."

"You're a h-l of a lawyer!" Slade's anger was rising.

"I'm not that sort of a lawyer," Hayes rose as if to dismiss the subject.

"Whatever sort of a lawyer you are I made you, Hayes."

"I know you did," returned Hayes, bitterly. "You've told me that before and this is what comes of letting a man make you!"

"You bet, rank ingratitude," hotly.

Hayes leaned forward, his arms on his knees and looked Slade square in the eyes.

"I honestly think you're drunk with all this power and prosperity. That little woman was the apple of your eye. I always said to myself: 'There's one man who does stick to his wife! I didn't believe wild horses could drag you away from home—'"

"One minute!" interrupted Slade. "All that has nothing to do with you. Neither you nor anyone living can interfere with me now. Have you stopped to figure out, and I say it with all kindness and with all respect, what sort of a governor's lady Mrs. Slade would make, feeling as she does?"

"Well, what sort of a governor would you make if you were divorced?" Hayes questioned, mockingly. "Those men in there," and he jerked his thumb toward the smoking-room door; "will they stand for that?"

"They've got to—I own them, boots and all!"

"But you don't own public opinion," thundered Hayes, banging his fist down on the table, scattering the copies of the senator's speech in all directions.

"Why don't I?" Slade questioned with an arrogant smile disfiguring his mouth. "I'm going to buy half of Merritt's paper tonight. I guess that will be public opinion enough for me. More than that, I'll stand as a man whose wife has deserted him. That's how it will end. Mrs. Slade will decide where she's to live—but it must be at some distance."

"You won't get your divorce through desertion," Hayes scoffed. "I know her. You can't do it."

"I can't do it, eh?" Slade's eyes held a nasty expression. "That's what they've been telling me all my life. Ever since I was a barefooted little brat running around the mines they've said to me: 'You can't do this and you can't do that.' But I always did it. Let me tell you, young man, after all I've conquered no woman is going to stop me!"

"Can't do it, eh?" he repeated, pugnaciously. "You watch me do it! You young jackanapes! I'm as good as deserted now. The only question is: Are you going to see Mrs. Slade—put her aboard a train east or not?"

"Mrs. Slade has been my best friend," Hayes answered quietly. "I love her dearly—I'm his voice broke."

"All right. That settles it. You turn over every scrap of paper of mine you have by—he thought a moment—"by tomorrow night. Then you can walk the ties to the devil, young man, and go back where I found you."

As Hayes turned to go, Strickland hurried into the room.

"Merritt has just introduced a very unexpected subject in the smoking-room—the question of—well, you've got to know it, Slade—the question of Mrs. Slade."

Hayes wheeled around and watched to see what effect this announcement would have on Slade.

"There are strangers there, who learned of your—domestic difficulties for the first time tonight," Strickland continued. "Merritt has thrown the bombshell."

"Why, I thought—" Slade began to protest.

"He's all right," came the senator's reassuring tones. "It had to come out. He's got his coat off in there for you now. He maintains that the opposition papers are bound to take it up at any moment. Now, what do you advise?"

"The truth," thundered Slade. "My wife is preparing to desert me. It will happen—Hayes jumped up and flung himself out of the room—"to-morrow—the next day—any hour!"

But Katherine was not a woman to

"see," and the senator looked grave. "Is this irrevocable, Slade?" "Irrevocable," declared Slade, positively. "As I have told you several times, senator, it is irrevocable. I'll stand by that."

Convinced that Slade knew his own mind in this matter as well as he had the reputation for knowing it in all other matters, Strickland returned to the waiting politicians.

Slade had been alone but a few minutes when Katherine returned.

"Well, Mr. Slade," the girl exclaimed, "things seem to be coming our way."

Slade was in no mood for mere conversation. He was annoyed at Hayes' attitude, and incensed because his private affairs were being publicly discussed in the next room. Mentally he consigned Hayes to the devil, his wife to the far East of the country, and registered a vow with himself that he would have that divorce and the woman he wanted in spite of everybody and everything.

He resolved to sound Katherine out then and there. He turned over in his mind the most cold-blooded proposition that a man ever made to a woman. He was planning to ask her to marry him, when he should be free, to decorate his home, preside at his table, share his wealth and the honors of the chief executive of the state. There would be no warmth in his tone, no love in his heart, no hunger of his lips for hers, no yearning of his arms for her yielding figure, there would be none of the fire of youth, nothing of the love of little children, nothing of the spirit that makes of marriage a sacrament rather than a thing of convenience.

As Katherine walked across the room, moving toward him with the quiet grace and dignity of the well-trained, well-gowned woman, he had a fleeting memory of the slight, badly dressed little woman, whose diffidence in strange surroundings had always fretted him. She a governor's wife? Impossible! He rose and stood beside the woman whom he proposed to use as another living stepping stone.

"Miss Strickland," his mind fully made up, "you've done a lot for me in the last few weeks while you've been making that bust. I think I understand you in a way. The more I see of you the more I think I—" like to make a—well, a bargain with you. That doesn't seem to be quite the word," he hesitated as the girl averted her eyes. "Yet I think that's what we call it."

"A bargain?" echoed Katherine. "Yes, a bargain," he repeated. "I never knew but one woman well—that was Mrs. Slade. She's a good woman—a mighty good woman, but we can't—I never had a home—not a home like Strickland's. When I have another house—that'll be what I'll want, I'll want my friends, my acquaintances, to come there. I want—well—headquarters. And I want a woman at the head of my house that I can be proud of—like Strickland."

Katherine was not surprised. She had anticipated some such move as this on his part, but now that she was face to face with the unvarnished suggestion, she found herself more shocked than she would have believed.

"In a couple of months I'll stand free," he went on. "Perhaps sooner. I don't expect any woman's going to love me—she isn't. Got to do that when you're young. But I'd do all I could for the woman. She'd have everything—money and—the power that goes with it. I want to say right here that I wouldn't speak if I thought young Hayes had a chance. I saw he didn't."

At the mention of Hayes' name Katherine had an instant's vision of Bob's tender face—his eyes burning with love looking into hers—of his youth—his strength—his fine honor, and her heart cried out desperately, pitifully for the shelter of his arms.

In another moment the old recrudescence of life in the old town, dull, cheap, uninteresting, and the lure of what Slade was offering, the money, the clothes, the servants, the power to reign supreme, swept her off her feet. The thought of divorce did not terrify her. Mrs. Slade, whom she had never seen, was only a name.

As Slade watched her standing straight and white, he feared he had been too brutally blunt.

"You needn't think it over now," he hastened to add. "Perhaps you will later, and perhaps you won't. That's for you to decide. I guess I've said all I can say."

But Katherine was not a woman to

But Katherine was not a woman to shrink from a situation because of its unpleasant features. She knew that she couldn't have all the things she wanted without some suffering, some pain. Her father's world had taught her that love was a thing of small consideration where marriage was concerned, unless it went with the advancement of one's ambitions. Love was not of the world. Place, power, wealth—these were of the world and this man offered them to her.

"This isn't a matter of sentiment," she agreed with him calmly. "I'll be perfectly frank with you. I don't say I won't think it over. I know just what you want of a woman. When you can go to my father free there won't be any barrier in the way."

She offered her hand as if to blind the bargain. He held it for a brief instant and with a hurried "thank you" left the room.

PURE BRED SIRE FOR DAIRY HERD

I am grading my cows up by using registered Holstein bulls, writes a correspondent of the Kansas Farmer. I have my second male now, and my first half blood heifers are giving as much milk as two-year-olds as their mothers gave as mature cows. My plan has been to buy a registered bull calf in the fall. My first one at two and one-half months old cost me $50, including the cost of getting him to my place. I recently sold this bull off to grass as a four-year-old, weighing 1,575 pounds, the price received being $75. Although sold on a beef basis, he is to be used by another man as a breeder.

Commenting on the above, the Kansas Farmer says:

The up grading system being practiced by our correspondent is the surest as well as the cheapest method of improving live stock that can be practiced. The use of a high class pedigree sire almost invariably results in producing a bunch of heifers far superior to their mothers from the production standpoint. This has been demonstrated over and over again, and yet many men attempting to develop

The demand for pure bred dairy sires of the leading dairy breeds has never been greater than in the past year. The demand for good grade and pure bred cows never was greater than at the present time, the price never so high and cows of the high standard so hard to get. It would seem from the outlook that there is a brilliant future for the breeder of high grade and pure bred stock of the right type and quality—the large producing kind, with good butter fat test. The pure bred Holstein cow pictured produced 15,000 pounds of milk in six months.

dairy herds do not make it a practice to use the best sires possible in their work.

It often happens that a man who is progressive enough to introduce a high class sire into a community is given little recognition for his progressive spirit. When it becomes necessary to dispose of the sire he oftentimes must send him to the market for beef. Our correspondent apparently had a neighbor who recognized and grasped the opportunity to secure a tried sire to head his herd.

It often happens that a man buying a young male must dispose of him before he is in a position to know just how good he may be as a breeder. A notable instance along this line occurred at the Missouri experiment station some years ago. A registered Jersey bull was sold at an ordinary price for a good registered bull, and later it developed when his heifers came into full production that he was one of the most remarkable producers of the breed.

Where several men in a community are interested in the same breed such sacrifices as this need seldom occur. A good sire may be kept in a community long enough to determine his merit as a breeder.

Loss on American Wools.

The high quality of American wools when properly put up, is generally recognized by our manufacturers, but so little attention is paid to the care of American wool at shearing time that it usually sells for less than its real value and frequently suffers by comparison with foreign wool. Such practices as the indiscriminate sacking of wool regardless of kind or condition, the use of improper twine and the use of insoluble paint for marking sheep cause really unnecessary expense and loss in manufacturing, which has been variously estimated at from 5 to 20 per cent of the original value of the wool and for which the producer must pay by being compelled to accept a reduced price.—United States Department of Agriculture.

Plague of Cockroaches in England.

Egyptian cockroaches are swarming in the workings of a large colliery in Glamorganshire, England. The creatures came over, and were introduced in some Egyptian fodder used in the stables. They have bred at an incredible rate, and their swarms now form a serious menace to the health in the colliery. A Sutherland expert has been engaged to attempt their extermination.

LIGHTNING HITS
BALLOON; PILOT HURT

Carrier Pigeon Brings News of Disaster.

Portland, Ore., June 13.—Lightning struck the balloon "Million Population Club," seriously injuring Captain John Berry, who was piloting the St. Louis entry in the race which left here under the auspices of the Aero Club of America.

A carrier pigeon brought news of the disaster to Portland. The message hastily scrawled on a piece of rough paper, which was wrapped in a piece of oiled silk and fastened to the neck of the pigeon, read:

"Balloon struck by lightning. Berry hurt. Come quick. George Y. Morrison."

The fact that Morrison, who was Berry's passenger in the race, did not say where the balloon descended, has led the officials of the Aero club to fear that the occupants of the gas bag were seriously, perhaps fatally, hurt. It is pointed out that unless Morrison was so seriously injured that writing was well nigh impossible, he would certainly have given directions for finding the stranded balloon when sending an appeal for aid.

Lack of information regarding the balloon's Kansas City Ill. and Springfield and the fact that the fourth entry, Uncle Sam, was driven to earth in a storm which wrecked it, endangering the lives of the occupants, has given rise to the fear that the two first named may also have met with disaster.

PROBING BAY MYSTERY

Conflicting Statements of Death of Young Woman Near Baltimore.

Baltimore, June 13.—Interest in the case of Ella G. Winter, the stenographer whose body was found floating in Curtis Bay on Monday, centered in the examination of witnesses at Annapolis, where States Attorney Greene expected to gain important testimony from John Rice, a negro, who was arrested, and Lee Miller, an employee of a shore resort.

Miller has made statements at variance with those of D. Meredith Reese Jr., the last person known to have been with Miss Winter on the day of her disappearance. Reese insists that he landed the woman from his motor boat at a river resort to enable her to catch a car, and that was the last time he saw her alive.

Miller has been quoted as saying that the couple could not have landed without his knowledge, as he was constantly at his post. He has admitted that he was absent from the pier for a short time on the evening in question while it was raining.

Miller also said that in all the times he had seen Ella Winter at the resort where he is employed Reese had never before allowed her to go from the boat landing to the street car alone.

Rice was employed on Reese's houseboat until his discharge by Reese a few hours after the woman's body was found. He is held as a state witness.

Supporting the theory of suicide two women who knew Miss Winter said she had spoken to them at times of being dissatisfied with life.

Dressed For Gallows; Gets Respite.

Wheeling, W. Va., June 13.—Dressed and waiting to be taken to the gallows on which he was to be hanged for the murder of his wife, Silas Jones, was notified by the warden of the Moundsville penitentiary that Governor Hatfield had telephoned a respite of thirty days. Leading citizens of Huntington, W. Va., where Jones resided, interceded in his behalf, declaring that new evidence had been discovered.

Fortifying Near Vera Cruz.

Vera Cruz, Mex., June 13.—General Rubio Navarrete, in command of a force of Federal troops between Vera Cruz and Mexico City, is reported to be fortifying the town of San Francisco, twenty miles from Vera Cruz, on the Inter-oceanic railway. Navarrete, it is understood, has about 2000 men at San Francisco.

TOLLS BILL UP TO PRESIDENT

The House Agrees to Senate Amendment.

WILL SIGN IT, 'TIS SAID

Mr. Wilson Did Not Think the Amendment Necessary, But He Will No Object.

Washington, June 13.—Without the formality of a conference, the house by a vote of 216 to 71, accepted the senate's amendment to the bill for the repeal of the Panama canal tolls exemption and sent the bill to President Wilson.

The amendment added by the senate reserves the right of the United States to exempt coastwise ships from the payment of tolls.

Administrative leaders in congress were virtually sure the president would sign the bill. In fact, it was stated that word had come from the White House that he would do so. The president, it was said, did not think the amendment necessary, but since it did not change the character of the legislation he would not object to it.

Mr. Wilson was congratulated because of the passage of the bill, which is regarded as another distinct victory for him.

Fresh from the bitter struggle in the senate, the bill was laid before the house.

Chairman Adamson, of the commerce committee, in charge of the bill, at once moved that the house concur with the amendments instead of sending it to conference. "The senate amendment," he said, "should be acceptable to all advocates of uniform tolls. It is exceedingly appropriate that the statement contained in the amendment should be made and promulgated in connection with the repeal of the bill itself. It is nothing but the truth and substantially the same declaration has been made by us of the floor of the house and elsewhere many times."

Representative Adamson's motion was not objected to and debate was limited by agreement to one and one half hours. Representative Murdock believed, he declared, the president would veto the bill as amended. Representative Simmons, author of the measure, said the amended bill "de lighted" him.

Majority Leader Underwood, while he declared he would not oppose the amendment, said that it was "negative and ineffective."

An attempt led by Representative Moss, Republican, of West Virginia, to substitute the senate amendment to the bill with an affirmative declaration of the rights of the United States to discriminate in favor of its own ships was defeated, 174 to 108.

Republican Leader Mann announced his intention to support the senate amendment, which, he said, "makes this whole long fight over the free tolls issue a draw, open for future decision and for future decision."

ARSON SQUAD FIRES CHURCH

Ancient St. Margaret's, Near London Damaged by Militants.

London, June 13.—An attempt to destroy the ancient church of St. Margaret's, at Chipstead, fourteen miles southeast of London, was made by the arson squad of the militant suffragettes.

The interior of the edifice was fired in three places by lighted pieces of felt saturated with oil. The church which dates from the twelfth century was not seriously damaged, the flames having been extinguished by villagers led by Rev. William H. Stone, the rector.

The militant campaign to destroy church property, which reached a climax when bombs were exploded near the coronation chair, one of England's most cherished relics, in Westminster Abbey, has caused consternation in the country.

SEES MORE JOBS THAN MEN

Secretary of Labor Talks of Crops and Revival of Trade.

Washington, June 13.—Predicting that within a month there will be more jobs in the United States than men, Secretary of Labor Wilson hoped to solve the problem of getting men to fill the places.

The secretary's forecast was based upon the bumper wheat crop, revival of the iron trade, mining and the textile industry.

GOOD ROADS.

Good roads are like other good things. It takes time and expense to keep them up, but, with the proper care of them, after they have been properly constructed the cost will be nominal, but if they are neglected they will soon give trouble and become costly to maintain. The thing to do is always to keep the roads in first class condition. Dirt roads would be less expensive and more satisfactory if they were kept in good condition by the use of the split log drag. But there are some who do not want even good dirt roads if they must devote their time to keeping them up. There are few of these, but there are many who are careless about road working, which, if properly done, means road keeping. It takes time and money to have good roads of any kind, but the money spent on them is an investment which pays large dividends in savings on cost of transportation of products, on vehicles, harness and above all, comfort and happiness. Why not secure these dividends? They are everywhere to be had for the asking.

CONVICT ROAD LABOR.

Columbia University Investigator Submits Facts Supporting the Idea.

Road building by convicts has stood the test of the scientific investigation made for Columbia university, through its graduate highway department, by Sidney Willmot, a road engineer, recently an advanced student in that university and attached to the staff of the national committee on prison labor.

The investigation into the costs of convict labor on the roads emphasizes clearly the economic advantage obtained by this joining of the problems of the convict and the road. This advantage reverts to the taxpayer and also to the convict's family, through the wage which can be paid for his labor.

The Academy of Political Science has undertaken to make this study available because of its broad social and political significance. When each state and county is engaged as at present, in the reorganization of its prison system and in endeavoring to do away with crude methods of torture, scientific methods of successfully employing the convicts with advantage to all parties become of public interest.

The findings of the investigation show that the work performed by the convicts in the different states ranges in value from $1.50 to $5.70 a day, with a profit to the state by the use of this labor of from 50 cents to $4.03 a day. In short, the contention is well sustained that there is a general and considerable profit at present going to the state by the use of convict labor for road work over the cost by other methods of construction, this saving being quite independent of locality and types of construction.

The prisoner himself benefits most of all by his work on the roads. The healthful outdoor labor, the better food, the incentive of the honor system and, above all, the wage, increasing in proportion to the profits of the state, all combine to make him better fitted to re-enter society. The investigation proves conclusively that the building of good roads can be made a definite factor in the upbuilding of men.

Abolishing the Turnpike.

The last turnpike, or toll road, in New England, or what is believed to be the last one, has recently been abolished. This is six miles of macadam road in the towns of Peru and Winhall, Vt. For years local protests were unavailing in freeing the turnpike of its toll gates, but when the road became an important link in a popular automobile route through the Green mountains the protest brought about state action, and the toll gates have now been removed and the road made free. It is only within the past four years that toll roads have been abolished in Maryland and Pennsylvania. The first American turnpike, it is said, was the famous one between Philadelphia and Lancaster, the company for which was chartered in 1792.—Engineering News.

IN THE HOG LOT.

Breeding from immature stock has a tendency to weaken the race, no matter what it may be.

A sow can easily raise two litters per year, and the total number for the two should be not less than a dozen.

Although the hog is not a ruminant, yet he will consume a large amount of forage in connection with other feed.

Shelters should be supplied in every pig pasture. Pigs suffer from the heat and hot sun.

Hogs do not perspire as do other animals, so if no shade is to be found they resort to a mud-hole. They would go to clean water if it were possible.

THE WALLOWING HOLE.

When Kept Free From Filth It is a Good Adjunct to the Hog Lot.

Say what you will, pigs are pigs, and nothing quite takes the place of a wallowing hole to a real, flesh and blood pig, says Rural Farmer. There are some wallowing holes, we have seen, that are practically a menace to the entire farm; a breeder of disease germs and a favorite place for the development of the house and stable fly. There are other wallows that are entirely safe.

A hog washes himself by putting on a good coat of mud and then rubbing it off. It is not according to our idea of bathing, but that is another story.

Hogs that have good wallows are said to put on flesh much more quickly than those that have none. One reason is that the mud and water keep off the flies, and they will eat in the middle of a day, whereas, if it is a dry pasture and the flies are troublesome they will lie in the shade and not care to eat except in the morning, when it is cooler.

A hog wallow should be by the side of a creek, never in it, and it is always best if you can have it with running water.

A few tablespoonfuls of sheep dip should be frequently put in a bucket of water and thrown in the wallow.

Heart Topics

ARE YOU IN LOVE?

"So you think you love me, do you? Well, it may be so. But there are many ways of loving. I have learnt to know: Many ways, and but one true way, Which is very rare: And the counterfeits look brightest, Though they will not wear."

A woman is pleased to admit the fact that Cupid has knocked at her heart—found her in a responsive mood. But most men, if asked the point blank question, "Are you in love?" will deny the soft impeachment. They try to be honest with themselves and with those who would know their heart's secrets. They really wish they could convince themselves one way or the other. Few people are shrewd enough to recognize Cupid, if, perchance, the rogue hides his bow and arrow beneath his coat as he approaches. Most men wish from the bottom of their hearts there was some sort of book or pamphlet printed, giving the information, "How a man may be sure he is in love." Though he knew there was such a valuable guide, he would hesitate about calling for it at a book store.

If there was a young and pretty woman behind the counter, who would be apt to make sport of the would-be purchaser of the book, he would be sure to back out the door in the utmost embarrassment. A male clerk might turn his head away to avoid confusing him. The editor of the heart column seems to be his only refuge. There he reads the following:

If a man's mind runs constantly on one particular girl and he finds the evenings monotonous which are not passed in her society he is deeply interested in her.

If the thought comes to him every time he reads a pretty little love poem in the paper that he would like her to see it and he sends it to her, she is making an inroad into his affections.

If he goes out of his way to make himself agreeable to her folks to gain her good will, he has a growing fondness for the girl. If it worries him to see her entertaining other young men and the desire is strongly within him to fight a duel with them, his heart may be said to be scorched with the tender passion. If he commences to take notice of the kind of men who are lucky enough to win brides, he may be said to be "in the notion." If he goes among the married men he knows and leads the conversation around to the amount of money usually required to start housekeeping, his mind is steadying itself to take the plunge. If all that his relatives and friends say to him against a certain girl proves to be of no avail, but, on the contrary, causes him to be obstinate and the young lady's defender, even though it be against those nearest and dearest to him, Cupid's first arrow has winged him. If he arrives at the conclusion that she is the sweetest, dearest girl the wide world holds, and the truth forces itself upon him, that life would be nothing to him without her—that her Yes would be to him heaven and her No a living death, he may be thoroughly said to be entangled in love's silken skein.

When the realization of his happy plight comes to him, he should listen to the voice of his heart, asking of her the all important question without delay. It's no use in trying to fight off true love. Like the whooping cough or measles it should run its full course, if happy results are to be expected. When a man is in love, marriage is the only means for keeping the rose in his heart forever in bloom.

FIVE NEW DEVICES TO SAVE LIVES IN MINE DISASTERS.

Rescue Work Advanced by Recent Improvements—Saving in Oil Fields.

Engineers of the United States bureau of mines have perfected six devices, five of which indirectly involve the saving of human life and the sixth the saving from waste of natural resources. In each instance application has been made for patent in order to retain these devices for the free use of the people without the payment of royalty.

Perhaps the most important of the inventions relate to improvements in the rescue apparatus worn by miners following disasters. This apparatus, which supplies oxygen to the rescuer, permits him to enter poisonous gases and carry on his work for two hours.

In the bureau's experience with this device three rescuers lost their lives, and in each instance it was believed their deaths were due to defects in the apparatus. The engineers found difficulty in the absorption of the poisonous matter of the breath in the apparatus and also in the reduction of the high pressure of oxygen carried in the tanks on the back of the rescuers. Both problems were solved.

A third invention is that of a collapsible mine cage for use in rescue work following a disaster. Often the mine cage is so badly shattered by the effect of explosions that it cannot be operated. In such instances, it is claimed, the collapsible cage would save hours of delay in rescue work. The designer is George S. Iltz, chief mining engineer of the bureau.

J. W. Paul, engineer in charge of the mine rescue work of the bureau, is the inventor of an electrical signaling device for use in shafts, especially following disasters. With it a person descending a shaft will be able to signal the hoisting engineer. If the man on the cage is overcome and the apparatus falls from his hands a circuit is immediately closed and a gong in the engine room gives a sudden warning.

Still another engineer of the bureau, Alfred G. Heggen, has invented a new type of valve or control casing heads for oil wells, a device that will at once shut off the flow of gas or oil in a new well and in that way stop enormous waste of these resources.

Wife's Jewels Are World Famed.

The first visit to New York made by Lord Wimborne, baron of the British polo team, was under the name of Ivor Guest, to officiate as best man at the marriage of his first cousin, the Duke of Marlborough, and Miss Consuelo Vanderbilt. After being raised to the peerage during the lifetime of his father he came to the United States as Lord Ashley St. Legers, and now that he has succeeded to his father's honors and great estates, yielding an income of over $1,000,000 a year, he appears upon the scene as Lord Wimborne.

Lady Wimborne, who accompanied her husband to the United States, is one of the principal hostesses of the Liberal party, and Wimborne House, her London home, is a species of social headquarters of the administration.

Her jewels are world famed, among the most celebrated being the great Hope ruby, said to be the largest and finest in existence. It is curiously engraved.

A SNIFF OF CHLOROFORM

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1914, by Associated Literary Press.

The Kincardine bank was one of the oldest and strongest banking institutions in New England, though situated and doing business in a town of 2,000 inhabitants. It made loans to hundreds of farmers, and it did business with many shipbuilders and shipowners along the New England coast. Many a many a time, as assistant cashier, I have seen $1,000,000 stacked in our vault and have tossed packages of $50,000 about as if they had no more value than so much old paper. I say we did a large business, but yet our building was a humble one and our methods as primitive as might be found in a country store. We had a brick vault with iron doors, but the laziest sort of cracksmen would have dug his way into it in an hour with a crowbar. Outside of the vault was an old fashioned bolt headed safe, which locked with a key only. It had a strong, massive look, but the lock could have been picked in a quarter of an hour, and two ounces of powder poured into the keyhole and exploded would have torn the door off. It will surprise you when I say that sums of money as large as $75,000 were often left in that old safe over night. My uncle, James Gordon Kincardine, who died a few years ago, was to blame for our way of doing business. He was a set man. He hated innovations.

I was twenty-three years old when a place was given me as assistant cashier. I had been in the bank almost two years when the rooms overhead were vacated and rented to a traveling doctor for a month.

On the 12th of a certain October, when he had been our tenant for two months, he came into the bank at the noon hour, a time I was always alone, to get change for a bill. Thereafter, until the climax came, he dropped in almost every noon. He never attempted to come behind the counter, though the door sometimes stood open, but on several occasions I went out to him. His calls after the first three weeks were for the purpose of manipulating a swelling on my jaw, and I always passed outside the counter and sat down on a chair. On the 8th of November, which was cold and dismal, we had in the Kincardine bank exactly $328,250 in currency. On the next day there was to be a big withdrawal to pay the hands at a mill, and some $50,000 was to go to certain Boston banks by express. I hadn't been left alone for over five minutes when Dr. Jordan came in to attend me. As he worked at my jaw he gradually turned my head to the left, so that I no longer saw him or the door. He asked me to repeat a story I had told him a few days ago, and I was doing so when the door opened. I did not stop my talk, and I could not turn my head. The man who came in did not speak, but he must have passed the doctor a sponge saturated with chloroform. I got the odor of the stuff at once and was wondering what it was when my neck was gripped by the doctor's left hand, and with the right he thrust the sponge into my face. I think I tried to rise up and fight the sponge away, but am not clear about it. I do distinctly remember, however, of hearing the doctor say:

"Now, then, lock the doors, and I'll soon have the money in the bags."

It was an hour later when I heard faraway voices and after a struggle opened my eyes and found the bank full of people. Up to that time no one had discovered anything wrong, except with me. They had found me lying on the floor and supposed I was in a fit though all detected the presence of chloroform. My first words were to ask them to look for the money. On the $328,250 not a shilling remained. Safe and vault had been plundered to the last penny. When astonishment passed away I was charged with having robbed the bank. It was not a fair thing for an uncle to do, but James Gordon Kincardine, to his everlasting shame, was for having me locked up at once.

It was a long hour before we got the tangle straightened out, and that hour lost my uncle every dollar he had in the world. The robbers had a start of an hour and a half, and the only thing they did was to make a half circle around the town and mislead pursuit for a day.

My uncle had detectives almost by the dozen, and the majority of them tried much harder to convict me than to overhaul the robbers. I was questioned and cross questioned until bored to death, and for a change they would threaten me. Some thought I had buried the money somewhere, as if one could go at high noon and do such a job, and the sleuth of all sleuths was sure that I had stood in with the two men and was to get my share of the proceeds.

For years and years I was a suspected person, and few men dared to own my friendship. Even when men no longer dared suspect they talked of me in connection with the robbery and asserted that I was next door to a fool that I did not suspect and checkmate it. I have given you a true and honest account of the whole circumstance, and no matter what your version may be, I feel the better for having written it out. I contend that my uncle's foolish and reckless system was all to blame, and in this I know that all bankers and their employees will agree with me and absolve me from all blame.
